Contemporary Theories of Literature and Culture

Reading and understanding texts by Louis Althusser, Michel Foucault, J. L. Austin, Patricia Waugh, Judith Butler, Sandra Kemp, Judith Squires, Catharine McKinnon, Toril Moi, Diana Fuss, Jeremy Hawthorn, E. Ann Kaplan, Susan Bordo, Fiona Tolan, students will familiarize themselves with some of the main currents of contemporary theories of literature and culture. Topics discussed: value criticism, deconstruction, feminisms, theories of the gaze, theories of the subject, theories of the performative, theories of sexualities, and postcolonialism.

Grades will be based on

- (i) class participation,
- (ii) two presentations each student is required to give, and
- (iii) an in-class final test.

February is reading month. February is devoted to reading the first three survey texts, which we will discuss in our first joint class (March 11).

Visibility, active participation. Be visible. Mere physical presence, even when you have read the assignments, is not enough: you have to prove your skills in reading, analysis, and argument in class discussions.

Oral presentation. Each student is required to give two short oral presentations (max. 5-10 minutes). First presentation: March 11; these are team presentations introducing one of the three overviews (Value criticism, canons, evaluation; Jacques Lacan; Deconstruction). Second presentation: choose a text from the subsequent topics. Here your job is to help us understand the text, give its main points. Try to follow up on the books and essays mentioned in the assigned reading. If possible, contextualize and interpret your text too. You are advised not to read your presentation but speak without notes as much as possible.

In-class final test. This test will cover all the readings, discussions, and presentations.
